

Flying club members show their skills to youngsters

Members of the Willy Howe Model Flying Club, located between Wold Newton and Burton Fleming, attended the Bridlington Club for Young People's Community Connect event last week.

The club was supported by Andy Symons, of the British Model Flying Association, and the event provided an opportunity to engage with a younger audience.

"Willy Howe Model Flying Club elevated community spirit as one of many organisations represented at the Bridlington Community Connect Event held last Thursday (29th May) at the recently refurbished CYP sports hall in an event aimed to foster community engagement and introduce residents to local hobbies and organisations," said Ian Howard, chairman of the Willy Howe Model Flying Club.

"Participating in the Community Connect Event was a fantastic opportunity to share our enthusiasm for model aviation.

"We hope to inspire newcomers, especially younger individuals, to explore this rewarding hobby."

The BMFA affiliated club delivered demonstrations of various model aircraft including fixed-wing planes and helicopters.

Club members were on hand to discuss all aspects of model flying, offering insights into the construction and operation of their aircraft.

Mr Symons added: "I extend my congratulations to the committee and members of Willy Howe Model Flying Club for their exemplary efforts and ongoing commitment to community engagement".

For those interested in exploring the world of model aviation, Willy Howe Model Flying Club offers trial flights and welcomes new members of all experience levels.

More information can be found at whmfc.bmfa.club.

